Wichita, Kan. – The Kansas Leadership Center (KLC) announced today that Dioane Gates has been named the nonprofit organization's Chief Civic Leadership Officer (CCLO). After serving as part of KLC's teaching team since 2019, Gates is succeeding Julia Fabris McBride who has transitioned to a new role at KLC.

"We are excited to announce staffing changes that will position our colleagues to thrive and KLC to continue its momentum," said Kaye Monk-Morgan, president and CEO of KLC. "Julia is now KLC's Chief Learning and Development Officer, a title that more accurately reflects her area of focus evolving our world-class curriculum. We're also thrilled to add Dioane to the team full-time as KLC's new Chief Civic Leadership Officer. He has a deep knowledge of the KLC framework, strong front-of-the-room teaching and facilitation abilities, and is deeply passionate about improving communities."

In addition to teaching KLC's programs for five years, Gates' career includes 18 years in law enforcement with the Sedgwick County Sheriff's Office, 24 years in ministry leadership, and 14 years as a small business owner. As Chief Civic Leadership Officer, Gates is responsible for overseeing KLC's Civic Leadership unit, including leadership development programming, civic engagement and communities of practice strategies.

"For some time, I have felt that the ideas shared by KLC have been a part of my life's purpose. I've been honored to teach the content, and I am more honored to be a full-time team member," said Gates. "The way we see leadership needs to be shared with Kansans and beyond. I want to be a part of making that a reality. In this new role I'm looking forward to helping individuals and communities create space for divergent perspectives to be heard, and have those perspectives influence outcomes for the greater good."
